POLICY BASE

American Baptist Policy Statement on Military and Foreign Policy

Christians are called to be peacemakers and this call includes the responsibility to work for peace among nations.

Powerful and wealthy nations must be held accountable to recognize that they have received their power from many sources and they have an obligation to use and restrain that power for the common good.

Nonmilitary means to resolve international conflict must be sought and practiced on an intentional and continual basis.

Global understanding and cooperation are essential to the pursuit of peace. Our welfare is fundamentally linked to that of all people. National actions and priorities continually need to be reassessed in light of this global interdependence. The needs and rights of all peoples must be respected if there is to be a solid foundation for peace.

Social and economic justice, as well as concern for human welfare and potential, are essential elements in national security. Social, economic and political structures that do not respond constructively to the needs of people contribute to the causes of war and global instability.

International economic systems must transcend narrow national self-interests and provide a framework for global justice and peace.

The United States should lend its efforts and influence to bringing about reforms in the United Nations that will strengthen it to meet present needs. Global enforcement systems such as police courts will be necessary to assure compliance with international agreements. Collective judgment and common action must be utilized to solve world problems.
